Join us for a powerful workshop designed to uncover and dismantle the unconscious biases that shape how we see others. Together, we'll explore anti-racist pedagogy, critical race theory, ethnic studies, and the concept of stereotype threat — essential frameworks for understanding how harmful attitudes toward marginalized communities are formed and reinforced.

We'll also examine the real-world impact of these biases, even when they come from those with the best intentions. Through reflection and dialogue, we'll ask: How did we get here? And how can we create real, lasting change?

This workshop is a vital first step toward challenging colorblind racism and building a more just and inclusive community. We invite you to reflect, engage, and be part of the transformation.

Come ready to reflect, question, and grow.
